ODAY I am wondering if my story called for a change of cosreaders would enjoy taking a tume. little sunny afternoon vacation trip to a studio on Long Island. The idea was suggested to me after showing borhood as this?"

"For land's sake!" exclaimed one of my guests, "where will they find a dressingroom in such a neighborhood as this?"

We who work daily in these studios forget it might be of interest to others, especially those who live miles away from the studio towns.

The old ladies were trembling with the studio towns and it.

Several street scenes were taken

The old ladies were trembling with excitement when I met them, and it was a beautiful ride through the country to the studio. We arrived there just in time to join several automobiles filled with the painted actions and actrosses and followed in

New York, June 12.—It was night on the Bowery. The bells in front of the pawn-shops were tinkling, to notify the way-farer who was flying light that he could exchange anything from the gold crown of a tooth to the shoes he wore, for cash. Now and then a purring limousine loaded down with slummers, raced through the street like a flash—the tail light gleaming red.

Out of a ram-shackled 10-cent lodging house stumbled a white-haired man. There was a certain something about his face that spoke of one-time respectability.

"Six stories is a long way to fall,"

The son is a big man of affairs. His father educated him at Harvard and then the mother died. It broke the father's heart and he took to drink and finally drugs.

In spite of the lact that there is one many years, when I am with those who are thrilled to the first time at our painted antics. I assimilate their mood and drugs. He disappeared several weeks ago because he did not want to be seen by his former friends or to disgrace his son. The son heard through a private detective agency that his father had just gone to a Bowery "flop house." He left the opera and went after him. Now the father is in a sanatorium.

To be able to locate any friend in New York is now a simple matter. It is done by electricity. Just press the button and that is all there is to it. A new city directory has just been invented. It shows a map of the city under glass and behind the rescue.
"If there isn't one of our boys,"
